A New Back for an Old One—How it is Done in Maine.

The back aches at times with a dull, indescribable feeling, making you weary and restless; piercing pains shoot across the region of the kidneys, and again the loins are so lame to stoop is agony. No use to rub or apply a plaster to the back in this condition. You cannot reach the cause. Exchange the bad back for a new and stronger one.

Mrs. E. G. Carver, 98 Oak St., Lewiston, Me., says:—"For about two weeks last January I had such an acute attack of pain in the back that when stooping or lifting I was in misery. Reading about Doane's Kidney Pills I got a box at a drug store. They helped me from the first and I continued taking them until the pain and lameness disappeared. I am now free from these troubles, and give all the credit to Doane's Kidney Pills. For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cts. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York sole agents for the United States. Remember the name—Doane's—and no other."

On Anaconda Hill, Butte Montana

Oh tell me, mountain, towering high,
Thy lofty brow to sunny sky,
Thy shadowy slopes thy story heart
A pain or sorrow e'er impart
The gallows frames that loom above,
Seem symbols of a filial love.
The whirling shivers like stifled groan,
E'er lifting loads from heart of stone;
While all within me but to me,
Recess of hollow mockery.
With heavy timbers e'er must brace,
To keep the crumbling walls in place;
Yet all so strong, and close and tight,
Till torn by men and dynamite.
Wild gusts, they face run heavy trains,
Like treadsaps loaded down with pain,
That from thy flinty heart was torn,
To melt within the furnace glow.
As 'twere but from a heart of snow,
While men go up, and men go down
To thy poor heart to drill and pound,
To give the world its wealth of ore,
Like prattling child e'er cries for more
Of toys brought to him from bounteous store;
And you both hand and crown withhold,
Because you have a heart of gold.

The Weather.

What?
Hot?
Well, why not?
Do you want to freeze
Under the shady trees
On a summer day
Do you want to get frost-bit
Under the leaves
Or have the janitor
Turn the steam on?
Do you want to sleep
Under six blankets deep?
And the blizzards to blow
Right here in July?
Hot?
Why not?

Summer Girls Are Ill-mannered.

How many of you girls take your good manners with you when you go on your vacations?
Think about it awhile, you girls who go from home in the summer. Do you observe many examples of what might be called traveling courtesy? I don't wish to be hard on my sex, but I have to admit that the first thing a woman does when she starts traveling is quite likely to be an act of discourtesy, says Christine Torrance Harwick, in the Delinquent. If she happens to be late or in a hurry there is apparently no principle about her to deter her from pushing in ahead of those in the line before her and bullying the ticket agent to serve her out of turn.
All the place for courtesy is by no means past when you reach your destination; in point of fact, it may be said to have just begun. At the summer watering places, in seaside and mountain hotels, I have observed more lack of courtesy even than in traveling.
In the first place many girls are noisy. I like fun as well as anyone, but never yet have I seen any reason why joy should be expressed in shrieks of laughter or noisy demonstration. I don't mean that I would have the foot on the soft pedal all the time, but there are mirth and pleasure which are neither silent nor strident.
I rather dread to hear a matron ex- press her mind vigorously about the so-called "summer girl."
"They disgust me!" she said. "Girls who are nice and well-behaved at home seem to feel free to act as they please when they are away, and they are generally pleased to do it. It is their duty, in steamers, in trains, at the beaches, they career with strange men, pick up all sorts of acquaintances! Why must a girl forget she is a lady just because she is on a vacation?"

Stylish Shoes.

While the toes of the newest models are certainly more pointed, the vamps are very much shorter, so that there is no pressure across the toes, and the bottom of the shoe is so adjusted that there is plenty of room over the instep.
The Cuban heel is seen almost to the exclusion of any other kind. In the first place, it is much safer for walking than the French heel, and it gives just the same effect of height and daintiness, so that it is only natural that it should be chosen in preference. Indeed from slippers to stout walking boots all designs are equipped with the Cuban heel this year.

In colors tan and gun metal are the most popular, young women choosing the former, as a rule, middle aged or elderly women showing a preference for the latter.

Gun Metal Pumps—Very neat looking pumps and ties are made up from the gun metal shades. There are the Colonial styles—a pump with wing tongue and smart buckle—the sailor tie and the Oxford in regulation cut.

For shoes the newest leather is oozo, and it makes most attractive footwear. There is a trim, neat looking sailor tie in tan oozo, laced with fob ribbon, that is sure to be a favorite with the younger set.

An ordinary ribbon or shoe lace will not answer this season, for to be up to date one must use a fob ribbon.

This shoe has the heel covered with the oozo. Other lines show heels of Russia calf, the remaining parts entirely of oozo.

There is no leather that is decidedly the daintier looking, the brighter heel is very smart for street wear, and dust, I fancy, would be more easily removed from it, being less absorbent than the duller, more porous oozo, so that there are advantages for both models.

The trig Oxford ties are more pointed than last year's designs, and appear to be no wider.

Dull gray suede holds its own and is said to be even cooler than tan. It is certainly very soft and dainty looking.

The prices of any selection of walking or house shoes vary from $5 to $6.50. Cheaper varieties are to be had, but with quite the same desirable effects. In fact, a very neat looking shoe may be purchased for $3.50.

Buttoned Walking Boots—In walking boots the buttoned variety is preferred to the laced, and for summer these models are made of two kinds of leather.

For instance, the uppers will be of oozo and the vamps of Russian leather. Boots in this style are trimmed with a straight foxing, Cuban heels and vamps of Russian leather in a lighter shade of tan, the oozo being two or three tones darker.

I must say that there are fewer freakish effects in footwear this season, and conservative rules reign throughout the list.

In the case of the high black boots, the uppers will be of black oozo and the vamps of patent leather.

There is no leather that will ever take the place of patent leather for dress wear, but those who would prefer not to emphasize the size of the feet would do well to choose the combination of oozo and patent leather, for the shiny surface is not very kind to large pedal extremities.

Smart Oxfords in patent leather are laced with the fob ribbon, pumps of the same leather being adorned with ribbon bows. A few are seen in Colonial style, but the majority run to the models that are more practical for outdoor formal occasions, or for wear with a good gown.

Damaging Trees and Forests.

The serious caterpillar infection of beech, maple and other trees has caused much alarm. In some places acres of trees have been stripped of their foliage. North Fryeburg is one of the places thus attacked.

The Maine Agricultural Experiment Station says the caterpillars name is Heterocampa guttivitta.

H. guttivitta is a common caterpillar and present usually in small numbers but that it passes unnoticed by birds and insect parasites and other natural enemies holding it in check. Last season and this, however, it has gained extraordinary headway in forest growth particularly in beech and maple. Apple orchards also are suffering and it is for the sake of orchard and shade trees that the following suggestion are recommended:

These caterpillars are readily shaken or jarred from the trees and this fact leads to the suggestion that by a combination of jarring and banding, much injury may be prevented, at least in the orchard and on the home grounds. After the trees infested have been banded, a boy with a padded mallet may be sent into them to jar the limbs on which the caterpillars are working, beginning at the top.

Protection by "banding" has proven very successful as a remedial measure with such caterpillars, and it prevents their reclimbing. The trunks of trees are painted with a band of "tangle foot" such as used against the gypsy caterpillar. Or a band of tarred paper may be placed about the trunk and smeared with a thick coating of equal parts of lard and sulphur. This mixture should not be applied directly to the bark of the tree, as there is danger of injury, but with the tarred paper it is safe and effective. In orchards which have been protected by arsenical sprays early in the season these caterpillars have been poisoned while they are too small to do much damage.

As these caterpillars burrow an inch or so in the ground to pupate and remain all winter, thorough cultivation or pasturing the orchard with hogs this fall and next spring would be very hopeful against another season's attack. Where hogs can be turned into wood lots this is desirable. Burning over waste strips which have been infested this season would also help.

This caterpillar grows to about 1 1/2 inches in length; is green in color with brown markings along the back. The pupa which remains in the ground during the winter is a shiny brown object about one inch long, and the mature insect which emerges in the spring is a mottled gray moth expanding a little less than two inches.

It is not predicted that such a serious attack will extend over many years, as the natural enemies are likely to get the upper hand again. Meanwhile, however, much damage may be done and where it is possible remedial measures should be applied. These caterpillars fed until late in August last season so that a solid month of their devastation is still to be expected before the last of them pupate.

The tax commission, to find out where ought to be paid and recommend some more equitable system of taxation is to have a public hearing at the Court house, South Paris next Thursday at 10 o'clock a. m. Every citizen is invited to attend and express himself on the subject. Don't forget about it. Here is the opportunity.

Quebec is celebrating this week its 300th birthday. The people are rejoicing in the presence of the Prince of Wales. Quebec, it is true, was not the first permanent settlement in what is now Canada. That distinction is reserved for Annapolis Royal, in Nova Scotia, which was founded as Port Royal by Baron de LaRoche in 1604. It is a celebration in which Maine is directly interested, both historically and for present day reasons. Champlain, who founded the city of Quebec in 1608, was one of the early explorers of the coast of Maine, and it was he who gave the Kennebec river the name it has ever since borne. It was from Quebec that the gentle Jesuit missionaries came into the Maine wilderness to Christianize the savages.

A certain Rumford woman has become a firm believer in a speedy answer to prayer through the following train of events. She had made up her mind over night one day this week to get early in the morning to get ahead of her work a little if possible. So with the mental attitude of a well brought up child, she included a request for force of mind enough on the following morning to send her rejoicing about her duties, incorporating this in her bedtime petition. When next morning came, she awoke at the time necessary to speak to her husband to rouse him, and at the same time the baby woke and clamored for breakfast, the milkman's cart creaked to a standstill outside the window and the boy thumped five jars of milk noisily down in the back hall and replaced the jars in the crate, and to cap the climax a tramp knocked at the door and asked lustily for a cup of hot tea or coffee or something to wash down me 'troat and the woman concluded she was enough roused to begin the new day!

Base Ball.

West Paris 6; South Paris 5.

South Paris defeated by the West Paris team in a ten inning game at the High school grounds at South Paris, Saturday afternoon. The game was interesting but loosely played at times. South Paris was in the lead in the early part of the contest and West Paris was not in the lead until they scored the winning run in the tenth inning.

The pitchers were Richardson for West Paris and Rich for South Paris and both did good work. Richardson had one bad inning in which he allowed South Paris four hits and hit one batter, this combined with two errors gave South Paris their five runs. After this inning he did excellent work.

Rich, for South Paris, pitched well but at the critical time his support failed him. There is little doubt but with good support he would have won the game.

South Paris at the end of the second inning had a lead of five runs but West Paris gradually cut down their lead until they tied the score at the end of the eighth inning. Then the battle was on to see who would win out.

A double play spoiled an excellent inning for West Paris in the eighth. Neither side was dangerous in the ninth, but in the tenth South Paris bunched three errors after two men were out and allowed West Paris to score the winning run. The best they could do in their half was to get one runner to first. The play of the two teams was not exceptional throughout; but there was no special feature plays. There was enough battling to keep all interested, the South Paris batters giving the West Paris outfielders more than the usual amount of work.

HORSE NOTES.

At the Fair Grounds there are eleven horses that are being put in condition for the season's activities on the track this fall. Under the charge of B. A. Springer are the following:

The black mare, Star, owned by James Cook of Oxford; Ben Own, owned by B. H. Bisbee of East Sumner; chestnut mare, Mercer, owned by A. A. Towne of Newry; bay mare, Hazel, owned by two-year-old black mare by American Law, owned by Mr. Fisher and bought this spring of Dr. J. H. Littlefield. She is considered a very promising horse.

E. L. Fisher in charge of J. F. Howland's string, which includes a chestnut colt by American Law, three years old, named Maine Law. The colt is considered among the best in the state, as are several more of the get of American Law owned by Mr. Howland.

These horses are in the very pink of condition and have had lots of slow miles to prepare them for faster work. Mr. Fisher has been handicapping since coming to the track, owing to the fact that the track has been resurfaced this season. It was expected to peak at once, but has bothered about packing down, for which reason it has been unsafe to give the horses very fast work.

American Law, one of the fastest trotters in the state, is in the best condition, is entered for stake races, for which Mr. Fisher hopes to have him in condition.

Mr. Fisher and Mr. Springer are educating these horses together so they will be well tested to company when they start out.

JAMES BROWN.

North Waterford, Me., July 23, 1903.

He Was So Different.

That She Still Had Expectations That She Would Be Happy.

The young man with the square and determined jaw had finished what he wanted to say and it had been no small speech. The pretty girl whose mouth quivered nervously at the corners and whose brown eyes could look serious as well as alluring, did not glance toward him. She gazed persistently out through the veranda vines.

"Isn't this a simple affair as you think," she said, "three busy-looking people—and men are so different after they're married. Now, just the other day I heard the man next door talking to his wife. It was after dinner, and they were on their porch, and I saw the light in his eyes. It was a nice looking man himself and they aren't poor."

"Well, he said: 'Good heavens, Eliza, I see you've been spending money at the manure's again. It looks silly in a world of 40 to waste time on having him make them young, and you can keep them clean yourself, and that's all that's necessary. It's just your vanity.'"

"Now, last week I saw the young man whom my cousin Nell's going to marry. He was in his and I saw over his lovely pink nails. He called them pearls I believe, and said her beautiful hands were one of her greatest attractions. What do you think of that?"

"Well," said the young man with the square jaw, "I don't see that it proves anything. They were two entirely different men, so it wasn't a before-and-after example after all. It just depended on the man himself, and I'm not like that first man."

"I don't tell," demanded the young woman musingly. "There's no way of being sure except to wait fifteen years and see how you turn out."

"Then before a man marries a girl," she went on, "he won't let her carry so much as a spoon of sugar. He loads himself down with her coat and umbrella and shopping parcels if he meets her going home and is tickled to death because he has a chance to do it. If she remonstrates and wants to carry some of the things home, he never then in his life is shocked surprise. Does she suppose for an instant that he is going to let her weary herself carting stuff around when he is there? Doesn't she realize what a pleasure it is for him to do things for her? He doesn't let her do things for her hand bag in his pocket? No, he doesn't mind if it does make the pocket sag!"

"Well, look at the companion picture. Did you notice the Smith's coming from the suburban town a few minutes ago? Just as they got in front of this house Mr. Smith decided that he wanted to go back and buy some cigars. His wife had a large pasteboard box from the tailor's in one hand and three small parcels in the other, but she said: 'Marry, I believe I'll let you take my overcoat home with you, because it's too warm to wear it, and here's my umbrella, too.' And she said, 'All right, dear,' in a patient way, and submitted without a pack horse. He never then in his life and I suppose he thinks he loves his wife!"

"What would you have done if you had been Mrs. Smith?" inquired the young man with the square jaw.

"The girl lifted her chin in a determined way. 'I'd dropped his old overcoat on the sidewalk and piled my own bundles on top of it and then walked on,' she said.

"You believe you would," admitted the young man. "Say, but I know how happy I'd be if I could have her overcoat on the sidewalk and piled my own bundles on top of it and then walked on," she said.

"No, I'm not!" insisted the young woman. "When a man's engaged he's worried if the girl sighs. He's sure he's said something to hurt her feelings. He wants to be told what it is. If she sits five minutes without speaking he asks if she's blue or what's the trouble, or if she's tired. He's sure he knows her every thought. She must have no life apart from him. They must think and breathe in unison. They are twin souls."

And afterward—well, did you ever see a person trying to converse with her husband after dinner when he's just returned from the evening paper? Did you?"

"I don't believe so," confessed the young man guiltily.

"The young woman shook her head. 'It's a paper joke,' she said, 'when it really isn't. I've considered a tragedy. It's only interested in the news and doesn't care in the least about Aunt Sally's dreadful headache or John's hair in business or the new gown she is having made or wants to have made. He doesn't care to talk about any of these things. He just wants to be left alone and if she persists in her timid efforts to make a talk he is liable either to explode in wrath or jam on his hat and go out.'"

"The young man looked decidedly gloomy. 'You seem to have strong views on the subject,' he said. 'I don't suppose there's any hope for me then. I'd degrees instead of let me down by degrees instead of let me down by degrees.'"

"No, no, I'm not," she murmured, "I really think these things are so in most cases, but you see—you are so different from other men, I think they won't apply to you!"

"I should say not!" said the young man, brightening up. [Chicago News.]

The K. of P. Ball Game.
A ball team from Pennessawasee lodge, K. of P., Norway and Hamlin K. of P., South Paris crossed bats at the Fair grounds, Saturday afternoon, the South Paris team winning by the score of 19 to 4. There was quite a crowd of spectators who watched the game with interest, though it got a little tedious with South Paris so far in the lead. But the general remark was "it's played for the fun of it" and fun there was in abundance, with errors abounding everywhere. It was evident that South Paris had more men that had practiced more or less. A collection was taken and enough received to meet the expenses of the afternoon. The line up of the teams—

Dunham took his snow shoes that he had made for the Peary expedition to be used on his trip to the North Pole to him at Portland about three weeks ago, and Norway people hope that the man at one time a resident of Oxford county, will have his pair of Norway made shoes (the best in the world) on his feet when he steps for the first time on the North Pole. It grows on the left side of the nostril and is not only used by the narwhal as a weapon of defense, but is used to stir up its food from the bottom of the ocean.

"The Magic Lure."

Since the advertisement of the "Magic Fish Lure" appeared in the Advertiser of July 10, lots of the fishermen have tried it. It has had a big sale and plug fishing abounds. Saturday afternoon we counted eight boats of fishermen over a small area of Lake Pennessawasee and all presumably with hooks loaded with Magic Lure.

"Will it catch fish?" you ask. We can only tell you a story we heard. That good fisherman John A. Woodman and Warren Bartlett bought two bottles at 25 cents each and went up the lake. The waves ran high as they reached the fishing grounds, for a stiff breeze was on. Somehow in managing the boat one bottle became broken and the contents spilled in the bottom of the boat. The fish began to close in on them. Mr. Woodman seized the oars and struck out for the shore. Mr. Bartlett piled a club and with lively work they reached shoal water before the boat was swamped.

Two more good sized trout were taken from the lake Friday, "plug" fishing. W. A. Bicknell got one weighing 4 1/2 pounds and Oscar Needham, 3 pounds.

These are the notices that have been posted at Lake Pennessawasee—
"Length of fish which may be caught:—
Length of trout, 5 inches; landlocked salmon, 12 inches; black bass, 10 inches; white perch, 6 inches. Penalty not less than $10 nor more than $30 for each offense and $1.00 for each fish. Pub. Laws 1907, ch. 181, and sec. 48, ch. 32."

Don't Rock the Boat.
The following article was taken from a pamphlet called "Sagebrush Philosophy":—

Since early in the season the cheerful idiot who rocks the boat has been busy, and more than one hearse has held his handiwork. Singularly enough, he himself can seldom swim, and, as a rule, there is some satisfaction in the thought that when the inevitable happens and the bodies of his victims are finally recovered, it is reasonably safe to assume that he won't do it again unless lakes and streams are a high and unsuspected feature of the scenic attractions of his new location.

More people are given to rocking the boat than he, however. It is a popular pastime and is indulged in by all of us in some degree of demeritlessness, from the cradle to the grave. The average man will confess that he didn't wait until he shed Fauntleroy trousers ere he began to rock the boat just a little in recognition of his coming majority—and in some is not altogether correct from a desire, about the time she bids her dolls goodbye, to teeter her light craft just a little bit and watch the waves.

Some keep well within the gunwale limit—others persist until they get a good ducking, and some, who are often cured—and many there are who suddenly find themselves in deep water and are unable to reach shore. There are life saving crews and life-line in plenty—to say nothing of well understood cautions and danger signals which are desired to protect a fool from his folly. Many are warned in time and many are rescued and many perish miserably.

The young man who gets gay with the girls and butts into booze is rocking the boat and jeopardizing not only his own future but that of his family and friends. The young woman who walks the streets and not only accepts but seeks the attentions of chance acquaintances and is seen at all hours and in questionable places, is rocking the boat.

The clerk who spends more than he earns, the accountant who discounts his salary, the laborer who buys more beer than bread and the business man whose expense and cash books don't balance—all are rocking the boat. The husband who has eyes only for other women—his wife who neglect her household duties and becomes a slattern in dress and demeanor at home and does her best gown and sweetest smiles for other men—both are rocking the boat.

H. S. Pushard and wife went to Mechanic Falls, Me., husband remaining to visit her parents for a time.

Fires in Woods.

How Mountain Watchers Spy Them Out.

A man on the roof of a log cabin on the top of a mountain surveys the region for miles around with a telescope. He sees a thin trail of smoke on the eastern horizon. A range finder is brought to bear upon the smoke. The finder reads 259 degrees. A glance at the chart tells him what part of the country 259 degrees means. He jumps to the telephone.

"Hello, fire on the southeast side of 10-acre lot. Heavy smoke appearing now. Looks like a bad fire," he shouts. He has hardly finished speaking before the fire warden of the district with whom he conversed is on his way to the fire with men and shovels and axes to put out the fire and prevent it from destroying any more of Maine's valuable timber lands.

Thus Maine is employing watch towers as did the cities of old to discover the dreaded enemy before the country is devastated and the inhabitants besieged. An elaborate system of lookout stations is now in operation to prevent disaster to Maine forests from cigar stubs, smouldering camp fires or other remnants of hunters and outing parties, firearms, sparks from railroad trains, etc.

There are already eight watch towers and the state is planning for more. They are situated on the topmost points of land in Washington, Somerset, Piscataquis, Aroostook, Penobscot, Hancock, Franklin and Oxford counties.

Attendants at each station are in telephone communication with thousands of acres of timber land.

At the watch tower on Attenu mountain there is a view of 200,000 acres of forest lands.

Mount Bigelow overlooks 200,000 acres of timberland farming country. At Whitecap mountain a station in the Keenebec and Penobscot watershed, 300,000 acres are under surveillance.

The Squaw mountain station at the southern end of Moosehead lake is 4,000 feet above the sea level.

The watch towers are square cabins of logs averaging in cost and equipment about $750 each. Each is fitted with telephone, telescope, a chart of the surrounding country and a range finder, an instrument such as is used in the army and navy for fixing distances and direction. The telephone lines connect the stations with settlements. There the fire warden now have hundreds of men, many of them volunteers at their beck and call when an incipient fire is reported. Observations are made by the watch tower operators every hour and a careful record is kept.

At the Squaw mountain station between 30 and 40 fires were discovered in one season and the consequences of early extinguishing enabled thousands of acres of timber land to be saved. The watchman at this station kept a record of all the fires.

If the wind is slight, the extinguishing of an incipient forest fire is a relatively simple matter. They are beaten with boughs, and earth and sand is shovelled upon them. When a heavy wind makes the smoke and heat almost unendurable, efforts are made to beat off and stop the fire by clearing a strip off and some distance ahead of the line of flame. If the ground fire is so strong that there is danger that it may overleap this cleared strip, a fire is made along the inner edge of this cleared strip. It will burn against the wind and meet the big fire. Both will then subside for lack of fuel.

"There's enough variety in our work up here," said one of the watchmen on a lookout station, "to offset any loneliness. There are two of us up here, one relieving the other in watching. We get $2 a day and are supplied with all sorts of provisions and conveniences which are toted on the backs of men from the lumber camps. When we're not on the watch we read and go out hunting."

A Strange Story.
A special to a Boston daily tells of a strange adventure experienced by Freeman Farrar of West Sumner. The story is as follows:—

"Mr. Farrar, who is a prominent citizen and has been in poor health for several years, became nauseated while attempting to eat an apple and was nearly strangled by a foreign substance in his throat."

Forcing his fingers down his throat, he pulled out, it is stated, a snake nearly a foot long. He fainted, and when he recovered found that the reptile had curled about his false teeth, which had fallen to the ground in the struggle. He has now recovered his health and appetite."

In the case of the State v. the J. P. Bass Publishing Company of Bangor, Chief Justice Emery of the Maine Supreme Court has handed down a rescript which, in effect, affirms the constitutionality of the Maine statute prohibiting the advertising of saloons and liquors in Maine publications. The case has been in the courts for six or seven years and has attracted considerable attention. At the time this advertisement was published a similar contract was urged on many of the Maine newspapers, but the other papers preferred to keep well within the law.

Do You Wear a Cigarette Badge.
When you call on an employer to ask for nature to you think he will not notice your hands? If he looks at the tips of your first and second fingers will he see the two yellow spots that denote the owner is addicted to the cigarette habit? Will he notice it? Of course he will.

When you face the man who employs the help needed in a big plant, he is apt to look you straight in the eye and ask, "Do you smoke cigarettes?" That has become one of the leading questions when a man seeks employment. Why has this come to pass? The reason is asked is because employers do not desire to have that kind of a man around, as experience with them in the past has been a sad one. Should you hesitate in answering, one glance will give him the required answer—it may bar you from a good opening. This cigarette badge, once worn, is hard to efface. When his mother looks at it, he wishes that his fingers were free from the stain and sometimes the pang of regret comes when the employer discovers it. He can see an instant change in the man who hires, then he hears the verdict: "No, we do not need you, young man!" Now, young man, don't you think that you would feel more self-respect if you got rid of the cigarette badge? You can, if you are ambitious to succeed in the world. It may take lots of will power but if you set to work in earnest and give up the cigarettes, the telltale stains will wear away. You can take it off just as you put it on. Why not begin the fight in earnest, without delay and get rid of the cigarette badge?

Ed. Grant's Dream.
Gets as Far as Golden Gate and is Barred Out, sees Not a Word of Rangleley Guides Inside. Peter Hears Time Trout Tale and Introduces Ed to His Long Lost Brother.

Eddie Grant—there's only one Eddie Grant you know—said he dreamt he died and got as far as the gate which stood somewhat ajar while Peter was making his morning toilet. "Just got a peep inside," said Eddie to a group of anglers at his camp at Beaver Pond, "when Pete came out, looked at me sort of gentlemanly like 'nd ast me what I wanted." "Want to get inside the gate, Mr. Peter," I said in my best mannered voice. "What's yer name," sed Peter, "an' where do ye hail from?" "My name's Ed Grant from Kennebago 'nd I'm a guide," sed I, "I got 'thru' 'n' o' my chest when I tho't of the hundreds o' lives I'd saved guidin' 'em durin' the past 30 odd years, a protection o' 'em from sin 'nd death. I handed Pete out my tame trout story, 'nd while he was a readin' of it I peeped over his shoulder, 'nd inside I saw several o' my Rangleley guide friends flyin' casual' with a gold rod 'nd a silver line with a diamond fly into a silvery pool. "One of 'em waved th' back of his hand at me, a signal I 'posed to back up, 'nd I got out, 'nd I saw 'em all flyin' 'n' th' sort. 'Twan' no way to use a guide friend, I tho't. "Peter red that tame trout story through twice, 'nd shed the gate with a bang th' second time, 'nd I heard the sounds I ust to hear at Echo lake, and ast me over one side back of a big rock. He looked me over from hed to foot, 'nd ast me if I hed any children or friends on the airth—particularly if I hed any sons like me he sed he was short o' guides to the infernal regions. "At the menshun of th' hellish regions I got chillin' tho' it was a to'ably warm day, 'nd I told Pete that I was tired 'nd would like to go inside the hellish gate. "We don't allow guides inside," said Peter quite severely, "they're barred out o' heaven forever." "But, I sez, eagerly, 'I saw a number of Rangleley guides in there a fishin' just a few minutes ago." "Pete drew himself up to 'bout 10 feet 'nd smiled so that the whole region glowed like there was a big forest fire a goin', 'nd he sed sarkastically, 'Those Rangleley fellers ain't guides. They only think they are,' 'nd after those words I didn't care what Pete did with me. "You come with me, Mister Grant," said Pete, puttin' his arm in mine, 'nd I introduced you to your long lost brother, who has a camp all by hisself which overlooks all the heavenly regions 'nd who sort o' acts as my private secretary. I found a man a written th' one millionth chapter o' his experiences a Behin' in th' Dead River regions. He had a long green whisker 'nd looked like the pictures o' Rip Van Winkle after his 20 years' run sleep. "Why, hello, Ed," sez he, grabbin' my fist, 'how's th' likker holdin' out down Dead River way?" "You've got th' advantage of me," I sed rather testy like, fer my friend Peter's face soured at the menshun of the word likker, 'nd being a Maine man— "Just then Peter stepped up politely 'nd said, 'Mister Ed Grant, allow me to introduce you to your lost brother who you will help edit this asbestos edition of fish stories.' "I didn't ketch the fast name, Peter, I sed kind o' apologizing like. "Annapas," sez Pete, 'nd he hurried back to the gate."—Maine Woods.

Hats for Midsummer.
Hats are really very, very charming just at this present time. Although rather exaggerated as to size, they blend shades and textures with a marvelous nicety. Hats wingy rather than flowery are plentiful at the milliners' just now. With a tailored sheening of the severe order there is nothing to be preferred to a studied simplicity in headgear. It is this artistic simplicity that tells.

The Care of Open Wounds.
It is a good thing to remember that nature is an excellent cure for a physician and always endeavors to effect a cure whenever an injury is done to the body. Sometimes nature can, unaided, do all that is necessary to repair the damage done even when the body has been very severely injured, while she fails or seems to fail utterly at times when the injury seems to be very slight indeed.

Let us speak first of the simple cuts that are common. These may be slight with little bleeding, or deep and long with much bleeding, but we will call them simple cuts if no arteries or large veins are injured, and if the cut has not severed any important structures as the nerves or tendons. In the case of such a simple cut, if the wound be small the bleeding will be unimportant and may be allowed to continue for a few minutes as the free bleeding will help to sweep away any dirt that may be found in it way into the cut. If, however, the bleeding does not stop very soon it should be checked by proper means. And just here it may be well to give a rule for the treatment of all wounds, a rule that is an excellent one for doctors as well as others, a rule given by a distinguished surgeon to his classes of medical students—Stop all bleeding, make and keep the wound clean, bring the edges of the wound close together and keep them together. Following this rule, if the bleeding does not quickly stop of its own accord, we must try to stop it. A very good thing to do is to allow quite hot water to flow over the wound. This may be done by holding the hand to be washed over the head, or by pouring the water over the wound. This is practically sure to stop the bleeding, and will also relieve the pain. The hot water has not stopped the bleeding, try next pressing firmly upon the wound a piece of absolutely clean cotton or linen that has been dipped in hot water. This is practically sure to stop or almost stop the bleeding, although it may be necessary to keep up the pressure some little time. The next thing to do is to make the wound clean. Now this has been at least partly done if we have used hot water to stop the bleeding, indeed it may be entirely done, particularly if the wound has been made with a sharp knife, so that the edges were clean-cut and not torn. If, however, you want to feel sure that the wound is clean it is a good thing to wash it with water in which boric acid has been placed, as much as will dissolve in the water. It will be better that this boric acid solution should be hot. If you cannot get boric acid carbolic acid may be used, but this is poisonous and should be used with care, a strength of about three tea-spoonful in a pint of water being sufficiently strong. After the wound has been washed out with the carbolic solution it would be well to follow with a washing of water that has just been boiled and cooled. This is to prevent leaving any of the carbolic in the wound. When the wound has been well washed and is presumably clean, the edges should be brought close together and kept there with strips of adhesive plaster. Then a good bandage should be placed over all, great care being taken that what touches the wound is clean, surgically clean. To make a bandage surgically clean it should be boiled for at least 20 minutes. If no such material is at hand, it will do to take some cotton or linen and scorch it by placing it on the hot stove, then place this next the wound and put on a bandage made from clean material.

If the wound is not clean-cut but is torn and ragged, greater care should be taken with its cleansing. It will do no harm to let such a wound bleed freely for some little time and even to keep it bleeding if it stops soon. Use the hot water or hot solution freely. By means of a syringe (see that the nozzle has been thoroughly cleaned in the solution you are using) probe the wound and thus carry the antiseptic fluid into every part. If the wound is much torn, and particularly if any dirt, as from the ground, has got into it, it will be best not to seal it up as was done with the other wound, but let the dressings be placed upon the open wound in such a way as to bring the edges well together but not to lock any poison in the wound. If the bleeding is of considerable amount and does not stop readily, put persistently and patiently continue it is proof that some veins of a fair size have been cut. In this case it may be necessary to apply a tourniquet. This is done by placing a cord about the part that is cut, twisting a stick into the cord and turning the stick until the cord is tight. If a pad is put under the cord a little to one side of the bleeding wound, it will press firmly upon the veins leading to the bleeding point and will stop the flow. It must be remembered that when a vein is bleeding the cord should be placed so as to leave the wound between the heart and the cord, for the blood in a vein is coming toward the heart. If the bleeding from the wound is in spirits, it means that an artery has been cut. In this case the cord and pad should be placed between the wound and the heart. After the bleeding has been checked by the cord and pad for a few minutes the pressure may be released a little to see if the bleeding is going to begin again. If not, the wound may be dressed as in the case of the simpler cut. If the bleeding begins again the pressure of the tourniquet should be again applied. If, after several trials, the bleeding persists, it will be well not to attempt any further treatment but simply keep the pressure up until medical help can be summoned, using just as little pressure as will keep the wound from bleeding, for otherwise other parts of the limb may suffer for lack of blood, or a painful swelling be caused.

Remember the surgeon's rule above and remember well that next to keeping the patient from bleeding to death is to keep the wound clean. A clean wound heals quickly and painlessly, as a rule; an unclean wound may never heal and may poison the whole body, causing even death itself.—(Portland Transcript.)
